Oscar was well liked by everyone in the community in which he lived. He was a member of the Reformed church and Sunday school at Fishertown. Why one so young in years and hearty as he always seemed to be and apparently needed by his family should be removed from us we are not able to understand but some day it shall be explained to us. After a short time Scritchfield became unconscious and when a physician was summoned it was found that his injuries were of a serious nature and he was taken to the hospital.

PENNSY CURTAILS EXPRESS TRAFFIC

Philadelphia, Jan. 25.—Falling off in express traffic has caused the Pennsylvania railroad to discontinue fifteen trains carrying only express matter on its lines east of Pittsburgh, officials of the company announce tonight. There has also been a big slump in passenger business in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, and as a result eighteen local passenger trains running between that city and Altoona, have been taken off. The curtailment in express service began on January 18.

NEWSPAPERS OF FUTURE MAY BE PRINTED IN COLORS.

Unless somebody does something quick, black and white newspapers are going out of fashion, according to J. M. Huber, manufacturer of printing inks of New York, a leader in the industry. The reason, he says, is that the Legislatures of the States that furnish the world's supply of printing ink are about to make laws to prohibit or limit the transformation of natural gas into carbon products.

"All printing ink," said Mr. Huber Wednesday, "is made of carbon black, a product of natural gas, and the world's supply has been coming from the natural gas wells of three States—Wyoming, Louisiana and West Virginia. Carbon black is the only pigment used for printing inks."

The Legislature of Wyoming recently ruled out the production of carbon black from the wells of that State. The Governor of Louisiana has called the Assembly to meet in March to consider the question of prohibiting the manufacture of natural gas into carbon products.

"No official action has been taken in West Virginia, but the matter is being contemplated."

"The sole pretext for the objection to the carbon black industry is that the gas is wasted in the manufacture of the product and that the carbon factors are a peril to the continuance of a supply of gas for other purposes, notably for domestic use."

FIRST AID INSTRUCTION

Beginning last Monday the High School was given the first of a series of lectures on first aid to be delivered by the physicians of the town.

CONFESSED SLAYER TAKEN TO BALTIMORE

Harry A. Brown, Who Killed Naval Academy Nurse Now in Jail

Baltimore, 28.—Guarded by non-commissioned marine officers and privates, Harry A. Brown, negro sailor, who has confessed to the murder of Miss Harriet M. Kavanaugh, Naval Academy nurse, on the Academy grounds last week, was brought to Baltimore.

Brown was smuggled quietly out of Annapolis, reached the postoffice 30 minutes later and within another hour had been formally charged with murder, arraigned before Commissioner Supplee and locked up in the City Jail.

The entire proceeding was rushed as much as possible and done so quickly that it went unobserved except to a crowd in the Postoffice Building.

Was Held In Irons.

The negro has been held in irons on the training ship Cumberland at the Naval Academy, but last night was removed to the Reina Mercedes, where he was kept under close guard of the Naval Academy, and local Government officials said that there had been no known threats of violence to the confessed murderer, but that it was thought expedient to transfer him to a jail as soon as possible.

In Annapolis he was far from the people of the town and had the protection of more than 2000 navy men if any trouble had been threatened.

He was taken to Admiral Stables' office this morning and placed in the custody of Marine Gunner James Y. Astin, Quartermaster Sergeant Thomas G. Watson, Sergt. Frank Kellan and Privates Benjamin Nunany and Mervitt T. Tuttle Handcuffed to one of the men, he was led to a blue naval ambulance, closed at the side and rear and the trip to Baltimore was started.

Randolph Burket Injured

Randolph Burket, a 15 year-old boy who makes his home with Howard Cessna, Esq., near Rainsburg, was badly injured last week while working on the Cessna farm in Friend's Cove. In company with another lad, and two girls, they were enjoying the fine coasting, using a piece of galvanized iron roofing as a toboggan, and had made several trips without accident. Starting downhill the toboggan upset and young Burket was pinned beneath one end of it. In raising the tin, the sharp edge caught the lad's leg near the hip, inflicting a bad gash. He was hurried to the Cessna home by his companions, Dr. N. A. Timmons of Bedford was summoned and found an ugly wound three inches deep and which required 42 stitches to close. The lad bore the ordeal without an anesthetic and although he is still suffering greatly, every hope for his recovery is entertained. The boy's parents are dead, but his grandmother, Mrs. Crissman, of Osterburg, is nursing him.

He was hurried to the office of Dr. Wilmont Ayres, here. But the physician thought hospital treatment was necessary so he was taken to the hospital on the evening train.

INJURED BY MACHINE

Miss Edith Steele, an employee of the Everett Press, is a patient in the Roaring Springs Hospital, suffering with a badly sprained ankle and severe bruises to the foot, suffered last Thursday night, while engaged in her duties of operating the folder. Miss Steele, in shutting off the power, was unfortunate in having her apron caught in the shafting; she was thrown to the floor and her foot in some manner became fast in the machinery, injuring the member so severely that the ankle bone protruded through the flesh. Local medical aid was rendered and it was thought best to take her to the nearest hospital so that the foot might be saved. She is getting along nicely and has every chance of complete recovery.

Hez Fellers and George James went to take a bath the other day. Hez says, "I'll bet you a quarter George that I am dirtier than you are." "Sure" said George, "you are three years older than me."

Three corn variety tests were conducted in cooperation with as many farmers by the Farm Bureau last year. Two of these tests were successful and were located in Morrison's Cove and Friend's Cove. The Fishertown test was abandoned on account of uneven planting by the planting machine.

The Morrison Cove test of which the results are given below was located on the farm of H. B. Hull, New Enterprise, Pa. All varieties of a local and outside source received exactly the same treatment in the way of culture, fertilizer and soil etc. They were thinned to an even stand by the County Agent and the yield of each are given on the same air dry basis.

MISS LEWIS RESIGNS TO ATTEND COLLEGE

It is with much regret that we learn of the resignation of Miss Marjorie Lewis from her position with the Home Economics Extension Service of State College and that she contemplates leaving Bedford within a few days. Miss Lewis severs her connection with the College in order to continue work at Columbia University, New York City of which she is a graduate.

Those who have been interested in the work of the Health Centre under the able supervision of Miss Lewis, as well as the other lines in which she has been engaged since coming to Bedford some months ago, know that the results are most gratifying and appreciate the fact that she has been untiring in her efforts. She is a graduate dietitian and we were most fortunate in securing her services.

The Nutrition Class and Clinic, which closed on Monday, proved most satisfactory. The children (48 in number) showing gains of from three to eight pounds. The Nutrition Classes in Hyndman, Everett and Saxton altho not so far advanced showed splendid progress and it is hoped that the local organizations will continue the work.

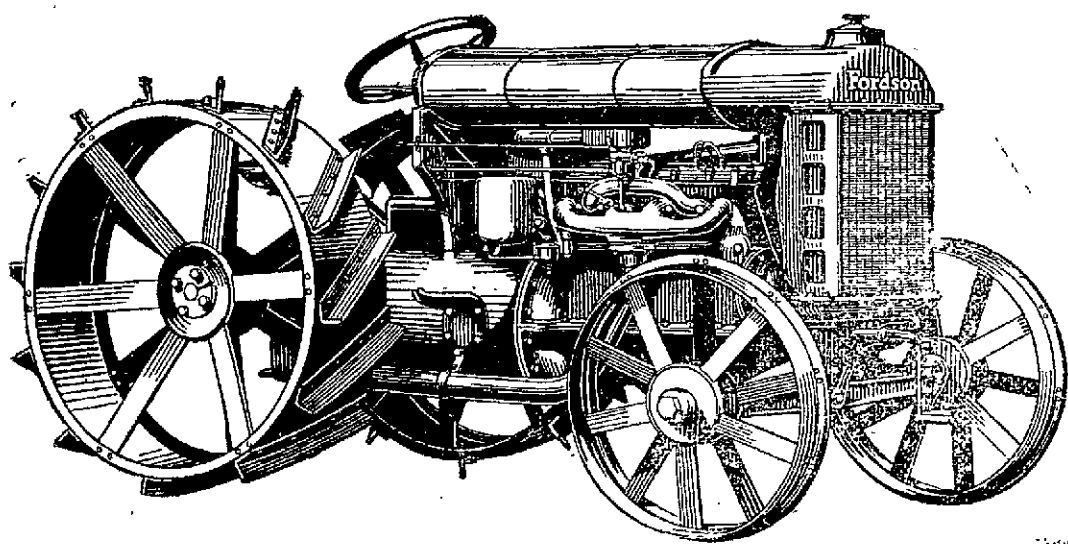

The High School Sewing Class, under the Parent-Teachers Association, deserves much praise for the work completed and the interest shown. The girls made a number of garments, some of which, together with other work by the members, are on exhibition at the State Fair at Harrisburg this week.

The Women's Food Selection Club, under the Red Cross, started with eight members and closed with twenty, a number of demonstrations being repeated on request, thus proving it a success. The Girls' Sessions were regularly attended and the members of the Club are to be commended upon their progress as well as upon the success of the three dinners which they prepared and served within the past week.

Which is the worse for a horse to run away with you, throw you, or for you to run away with the horse, get thrown in and get laid up for six years?

Fordson

For thirty-five years Henry Ford, a farmer's boy, has been working on the problem of a successful tractor for the farm, and for the past fourteen years has devoted much time and a vast amount of money to the development of the present Fordson Tractor. Today that Tractor is in use on nearly 200,000 farms and if you have any doubt as to the satisfaction it gives to those who are using it, call in and get the booklet, just issued by the Ford Motor company and called "The Fordson at Work" and read the testimony which is there given by the multitude of owners of Fordson Tractors. No evidence can be more conclusive than that of the man who actually knows, by personal experience than this is the line of testimony carried in this little booklet. There is no cost for this booklet. If you cannot call for it, write, drop us a postal and we will mail it to you without charge. It is so valuable you ought to have it because it is the open door through which the farmer will pass from the hard working drudge to the comparative comfort of the manufacturer. The Fordson makes it possible for the farmer to plan and direct, while the machine will do the work. It presents the widest latitude for the farmer to exercise his brain power and plan how he can get the most from the soil, knowing that the Tractor will do the hard work, do it better, do it quicker, and therefore do it more profitably. This means not alone in the cultivation of the soil, in the harvesting of the crops, but in a hundred and one different demands that are made for labor, cutting of ensilage and the filling of the silo, cutting of wood, operation of the washing machine, in the lighting of the house with electricity, supplying the house with running water, bringing to the farmer's wife and daughters the conveniences of the city, relieving them of much of the hard, unpleasant part of housework.

Claims "Yankee" is Chinese. "Yankee" is a Chinese word, according to Teh Yi Hsieh (whose last name means "Thank You"), a Celestial who is visiting this country. He explains that the word probably came from English or Dutch sailors who had touched ports in the Orient. In East India they may have been greeted with the words "Yang gee," which mean "You are a young foreigner." These East Indian words came from the Chinese words "Yang Jung." Teh Yi Hsieh says, and this explains why "Yankee" is a Chinese word.

To Win Success.

The trouble with a great many people is that they are not willing to make present sacrifices for future gain. The tools for self-improvement are at your hand. Use them. If the ax is dull the more strength must be put forth. If your opportunities are limited you must use your energy, put forth more effort. Progress may seem slow at first, but perseverance assures success.—Orison Swett Marden in Chicago News.

Church's Legislative Bodies.

The church of England has two legislative bodies, called convocations, which attend to ecclesiastical matters. Each convocation, that of York and that of Canterbury, contains two houses. The upper house is composed of bishops and other dignitaries, and the lower house is made up of deans, archdeacons and delegates, who are elected whenever a new parliament is chosen.

Almost Incredible.

In Bombay there is a fakir who spends all the hours of daylight of every day suspended head downward. Two fiber ropes attached to the limb of a tree constitute his support. Early every morning he takes hold of the handles at the ends of the two ropes, reverses the natural position of the body, and hangs there till sunset. He has been doing this now for three years.

"Chauvinism."

"Chauvinism" derives its name from Nicolas Chauvin, a soldier in the army of Napoleon, who was ridiculed by his comrades for his demonstrative and unreasoning patriotism. The term has come to be applied to anyone exhibiting unreasoning patriotism, or an excessive enthusiasm for national ascendancy.

Wedding Ring Once Barred.

The Puritans of the seventeenth century used no ring at the wedding ceremony, as they considered it a pagan symbol and superstitious contrivance. All that they required was that the man and woman should join hands when stating their purpose to live together in wedlock.

Isinglass in Japan.

While isinglass, made from seaweed, is produced in every part of Japan where climatic conditions are favorable, Osaka, Kyoto and Iyogo are said to produce more than two-thirds of the entire amount, about 2,809,207 pounds.

There is no man suddenly either excellently good or extremely wicked, but grows so, either as he holds himself up to virtue, or lets himself slide to viciousness.—Sir Philip Sidney.

HELPFUL HINTS.

Sometimes it happens that omelette is left. It is pity to waste so good a dish. Try the Italian method of serving it, though this is not a leftover, but a choice dish prepared for an occasion. Cut the omelette in strips a quarter of an inch wide, heat in butter, sprinkle with grated cheese and serve with gravy or any sauce, seasoned with vegetables such as celery, onion, tomato and parsley.

The use of vegetable oysters (salsify) in chicken pie is new to this generation, but was commonly used in the old days. Cut the salsify and cook until tender; add to the chicken pie. It was not a measure of economy in those days, but a pint of salsify would extend a pie several servings, and at the same time give an added flavor.

When preparing hamburger steak, add a pinch of clove, a few black walnuts and a little sausage. For seasoning put slices of onion around the steak rather than adding the onion to the meat.

Maple sirup makes a most delicious fondant for home-made candies. Where sirup is plenty it may take the place of sugar in many kinds of candies.

Any bits of leftover meat, especially ham, may be ground through the meat chopper, seasoned with a dash of mustard and then packed into a small jar covered with melted fat and set away for sandwich filling, to use as a sauce or with rice and tomato. Even a half of a jelly glass will season a dish of rice or serve for a half-dozen sandwiches.

A nice luncheon dish may be made by using leftover ham (chopped); spread on buttered toast and serve on it a nicely poached egg.

Puffed Rice Brittle.—Cook in a smooth iron frying pan one cupful of sugar, stirring until melted, and a golden-brown sirup. Stir into this one cupful or more of puffed rice, previously heated in the oven until crisp. Pour out on a greased pan; cool and break in pieces.

HOW ABBIE VOTED

By AINA SILVANIUS.

(© 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"All there is in the papers these days is woman suffrage clubs and voting," remarked Tom Brown to his wife.

"I'd hate to have a woman running round to such places and neglecting her home."

"My house isn't neglected; is it, Tom?" she inquired.

"I should say not, and I'm glad you don't get such ideas in your head."

"Mrs. Carlisle has invited me to go to the city with the members of her club next Monday," his wife went on.

"Umph," grunted Tom, remembering that that was the day the women of Woodville registered, and he strolled out to the barn.

"Poor Tom," smiled Mrs. Brown to herself. "He's the best husband in the world, but oh, so awfully selfish!"

All the next day Tom racked his brain to find some excuse to keep his wife at home, but none could he find until Saturday when Bill Hanson, a neighbor, expressed a desire to go to the city. Tom eagerly offered the use of his buggy and driving mare, which surprising offer was eagerly accepted.

Early Monday morning the mare was stily driven out and delivered into the hands of Bill Hanson.

Serely unconscious of her husband's maneuvers, Mrs. Brown bustled about the house preparing dinner. Flaky pies were set on the long shelf on the screened porch to cool, and the odor of roast chicken issued from the kitchen door.

After dinner Tom lingered about the house in an unaccountable manner, while his wife hurried around clearing the table and piling the dishes into the pan.

"Haden't you better be hitching up, Tom? I'm almost ready," she said.

Tom rather overacted his start of surprise.

"Why, did you mean to go?" he asked innocently. "I wish I'd known. I thought you'd given up. I've gone and let Bill Hanson take Kitty and the buggy."

Mrs. Brown regarded her husband with an odd little smile.

"Oh, well," she returned suddenly, "that's all right. I thought you might be busy, so I partly arranged to go with Mrs. Carlisle."

Tom gazed helplessly at her a moment then went out and banged the door.

"If that woman don't beat all," he muttered. "I'll bet she knew all the time what I was about. I believe I'll go right in and forbid her to go."

He marched back to the house. On the step he halted in uncertainty. He looked into the kitchen. His wife was not in sight.

The pantry door stood partly open, the key in the lock.

She might be in there. He listened. Yes—he could hear her moving about. His eyes glowed with sudden resolution.

He tiptoed lightly across the floor, softly closed the door, turned the key and dropped it in his pocket.

"I've fixed it this time," he chuckled. "She won't like it, I guess, but I won't have it said that my wife is gadding round to the polls." Then Tom went down to the garden.

A few hours later a buggy came rumbling down the road.

It stopped at the Brown gate and a woman alighted.

Tom saw her and stared. If he wasn't mistaken that woman was his wife. Yes—it was Abbie. She met him with no sign of embarrassment.

"Am I late, Tom?" she inquired.

"Abbie," he said, solemnly, "how did you get out of that pantry?"

The woman looked startled. "The pantry," she echoed. "Why, Tom, what do you mean?" He stared at her a moment in silence.

"Somebody," he began, then stopped. "Well, I locked the pantry," he finished, rather lamely. Without stopping to say any more they entered the house together. Tom sat down in the chair his wife pushed toward him.

"Happy birthday," she exclaimed gayly, throwing a pair of new slippers upon his lap.

"My birthday!" he ejaculated, "and I'd forgotten all about it. Is that why you went to town?"

"Of course it was," laughed Abbie. "Just see what else I've got." She started toward the pantry and with a sudden recollection Tom rose and followed her. He drew the key from his pocket and the two stared at each other.

Strange sounds were issuing from within.

Tom jerked the door open and stood gazing at the scene before him. Seated with his head back to the wall snoring, was the much tattered form of a man. There were crumbs in his grizzled beard and his features wore a blissful, well-fed look.

"Open the door, Abbie," Tom ordered, and the tramp was assisted from the house. When Tom returned his wife was standing in the door holding in her hands a plate, on which were the remains of a beautifully frosted cake.

"I'm sorry, dear," she remarked, demurely. "It was your birthday cake."

Tom's face reddened perceptibly as his sheepish eyes met those of his wife.

"I want you to go to the town hall with me tomorrow, Abbie, and vote. I guess you've earned the right."

YOU CAN'T

Once in Awhile Your Blood Clogs and Your Vitality Runs Down

THEN TAKE PEPTO-MANGAN

You'll Pick Up Again Quickly with Plenty of Red Blood Corpuscles

Physicians nowadays take a blood test when you are run down. They count the red corpuscles in your blood. If these are too few they give you a tonic for your blood. It happens right along. They are always on the lookout for indications of weak blood.

Why? Because they know when your blood is weak your resistance to disease is low. Your vitality and energy quickly run down.

You can tell when your blood is weak. You look pale, feel tired. You are not ill, but you don't feel right. You don't want to do things. That is the time to take the well-known tonic, Pepto-Mangan.

Pepto-Mangan builds red corpuscles. Physicians have prescribed it for thirty years.

Pepto-Mangan is sold in liquid and tablet form. The medical value is exactly the same. Take either kind you prefer. But be sure you get the genuine Pepto-Mangan—"Gude's." The full name, "Gude's Pepto-Mangan," should be on the package.

Chapter XIII (Continued from last week.)

Through the Break in the Netting She Thrust Her Fist.

God, who could be so damnable as that? Come, let me get the stuff." Together they stole back to Tonnie's room and Dr. John carried away the medicine with him, leaving Tony with a caution not to speak of the matter to his brother. Putting on his clothes, John went outside and made a tour of the house. It wasn't difficult to find the place where the man had fallen, but there was no sign of him anywhere.

Tonnie did not sleep at all that night. But very early in the morning she arose and slipped into Dr. Paul's room and put back the medicine Dr. John had given her.

During the morning Dr. John Pendlehaven softly entered her room. He came forward, his hands outstretched, his face white and very grave.

"Darling little girl," he whispered, with much emotion. "You have saved my brother's life. The villain, whoever he was, put the rankest kind of poison in it. He must have gotten it from some doctor, for no druggist would have sold it to him."

"Mebbe he's dead," replied Tony gently, with an expression of awe. "It was a long tumble he took."

"No; he got away! I've hunted the place over for him. Would you know him again if you saw him?"

"Sure," replied Tony, nodding, but she said no more. To tell him who the man was would mean to break the solemn oath she had made on the Christ to her mother.

A timid knock brought the conversation to a close. Mrs. Curtis was at the threshold when Pendlehaven opened the door.

"I've been looking the house over for you, John," she began. "Boy's got a headache! He said for you not to bother to come to him, but to give me something to make him sleep."

"Is he drunk?" demanded Pendlehaven.

Mrs. Curtis began to cry.

"John, how unkind!" she sniffled from the haven of her handkerchief. "The moment the child complains everybody accuses him of drinking. No, of course, he isn't drunk."

For many days Reginald Curtis tossed fitfully in bed, tortured by the thought that he would never cease being haunted by Tony Devon's spirit. He dared not get up, for he was covered with bruises from his fall, and added to his misery, he imagined every time the door opened he was going to be arrested. But no such thing happened, and one afternoon when Dr. John was gone and his mother and Katherine were shopping downtown, he crawled out of bed and made his way softly from the house.

Uriah Devon had ventured back to the Hoghole with his canal boat, so when Reginald appeared aboard her Devon met him with a growl.

"Where in hell you been all this time, Rege?" he demanded in a snarl.

Reggie shuddered, as he sank down on the bench.

"I'm going crazy," he muttered. "I've been awful sick."

"You mean just drunk, don't you? Didn't you try to do what I told you to?"

The boy nodded and shivered again.

"I sure did, but—"

"But what?" cried Devon.

"I put the stuff in the medicine all right, but something happened." Reggie's voice was low and wavering as he finished the statement.

"What happened?" repeated Devon hoarsely. "Don't sit there like a d— fool and look as if you'd swallowed a live eel."

"I was going to slip back from the window sill to the tree," Reggie told him, "and Tony's ghost rose up before me and shoved me clean off the ledge and down to the ground." Uriah's eyes almost protruded from his head. Then a slow smile ran around his lips.

"Rats!" he ejaculated huskily. "Rats, you fool! There ain't no such things as ghosts."

"Yes, there is, Devon," insisted Reggie, in a dreary monotone. "I've seen one! I've seen Tony, I say, and many a time she's come so close to my eyes I could have touched her if she could have been touched. The fall made me sick. I've been in bed ever since."

"And your cousin's still alive, eh?" Uriah's voice had a snarl in it.

"Still alive," muttered Reggie.

"What you goin' to do about it now?" demanded Devon. "Try it again?"

Brown shook his head.

"No, not yet, Riah," he muttered. "Not just yet. I can't."

"You got to get me a lot of money some way," Devon came in with. "I've got to get out of this country, or I'll be hooked to jail if those Syracuse folks find me. You'd better be getting home and back to bed. Best take a stiff swing, too, to settle your nerves."

He watched the tall thin boy walk slowly away in deep meditation. Then he laughed and went below to the cabin.

Almost a week after Reggie's futile attempt to poison his Cousin Paul, Tony Devon was sitting in her room, reading, when a servant appeared and told her some one wanted to see her downstairs. Her heart bounded with delight, for she was sure Philip had come again and had sent for her. She rushed to the glass, caught a glimpse of her rosy face, pushed back a few stray curls and went downstairs to the drawing room.

As she stepped inside, she came to a sudden terrified halt. Her father was seated in a large chair and his eyes, red and swollen, were centered upon her. Then he smiled, that wicked smile that always widened his thick lips when he had succeeded in some evil thing.

"Hello, Tony," he chuckled. "You've made a fine nest for yourself, huh?" Tony only stared at him. She felt suffocated by his sudden appearance.

"I came to talk to you, kid," he said, the wheedle coming into his tones that always augured bad for the person addressed. "Sit down."

Tonnie sat, not because he told her to, but because she couldn't stand on her trembling legs.

"You don't appear to be very tickled to see your old dad," he threw at her, a frown wrinkling his face. "Get up and come over here." His wicked eyes seemed to be swallowing her whole. In fact Devon could not make himself believe this beautiful creature was the Tony who, he thought, had been drowned in the lake. He felt a new sensation within him as his gaze took in every line of the lovely figure.

"Come over here," he said once more, "and tell me how you got out of the lake that night. Did you swim ashore?"

Tonnie shook her head.

"I'm not going to tell you anything," she murmured almost inaudibly.

"Well, keep it to yourself, then," snapped Uriah. "When I get you back to the 'Dirty Mary' I know ways which'll bring out of you what I want to know. So get your things and come along home."

Tonnie felt as if the bottom had fallen out of the world. Then a boy's smile, and a boy's words, "Salvation, little Tony, is always at hand, for God is good," seemed to strike both her vision and hearing.

Tony believed every word Philip MacCauley uttered. He couldn't speak an untruth if he tried. If as he had said, Salvation was at hand, then she could be saved at that moment.

"I'm busy here, daddy," she managed to say. "I'm doing some nursing, so I can't get away just now!"

"You'll come just the same," replied Devon, getting to his feet.

"Divine Love is everywhere," flashed through Tony's mind as she too struggled up. She dared not scream, and even if she did, there was no one in the house who would help her. Mrs. Curtis and her daughter would be delighted to have her gone and Dr. John was out among his patients. There seemed to be no escape for her now. She dared not appeal to the weak, sick man upstairs.

Thinking of him made her blurt out:

"Did you send that awful Brown fellow here to put poison in Dr. Paul's medicine?"

Uriah glared at her, went white and put his hand on a chair to steady himself.

"I don't know nothin' about any man or any poison," he growled. "You'd better be comin' along now."

"'Twas the man you said I had to link up with. He used to come to the 'Dirty Mary,'" explained Tonnie, seeing her words had frightened her father. "I bet you sent him here."

"Keep your clack shut," growled Devon, just as the door opened, and Mrs. Curtis entered. Tony whirled and faced her, although she didn't have the courage to utter a word. The woman looked from the girl's agitated face to Devon's, questioning.

"This is my kid, ma'am," said Uriah, with a wave of his hand toward Tony. "I've come to take her home. Get your duds, brat!"

Tonnie turned as if to obey, and Mrs. Curtis caught her arm.

"Go as you are," she directed, "I'll send your things after you."

Tony's eyes gathered a belligerent expression.

"I won't go without saying good-by to Cousin Paul," she began.

"If she gets up there once," interposed Mrs. Curtis, in an undertone to Uriah Devon, "you won't see her again."

Tonnie had heard the words and knew they were true. If she could get upstairs with Doctor Paul and then lock the door, no one would dare venture after her.

Devon saw swift intelligence light up her face. He didn't intend to allow her out of his sight. He caught at her roughly as Mrs. Curtis barred her flight to the door.

"Let me alone," she cried. "Let me alone."

Uriah snatched her hands, and Mrs. Curtis buried her fingers in the dark curls. As Tonnie cried out again, the door suddenly opened, and John Pendlehaven walked into the room.

Uriah dropped the girl's hands, and Mrs. Curtis fell back with a startled ejaculation.

"What does this mean?" questioned Doctor John.

"My father's here," said Tony, her voice breaking.

"Her father, Cousin John," Mrs. Curtis repeated.

"I've come for my girl, mister," said Uriah, plucking up his courage.

"And she," Pendlehaven kept his eyes on Tonnie, "does she want to go with you?"

"Whether she wants to go or not, she will," ejaculated the other man. "Nobody can keep a kid from her own father, I'm a guessin'."

"Tony, child," broke forth Doctor John, "don't look so frightened. No one's going to hurt you while you're with me. Come here, my dear."

His voice was so low, so tender, that Mrs. Curtis ground her teeth in rage, and Uriah Devon felt his power ebbing away.

Tonnie walked swiftly to Doctor John's side and slipped her hand into his.

"Those two said I couldn't even say good-by to—"

She bowed her head against the kindly arm that supported her and for a moment was so agitated she could not proceed.

"Hush, dear," pleaded Pendlehaven. "Hush! Do you want to stay here?"

"Yes, oh, yes, sir, I do, indeed, sir!" she cried. "But—but—"

"Then you'll stay," the doctor told her in a voice low pitched and stern. "If your father thinks—"

"I'm goin' to have my girl," cried Uriah.

"Then you have the law at your hand to use, Mr. Devon," returned the doctor, "and you, Sarah, I'll ask you to attend to your own affairs after this."

"But, Cousin John," argued Mrs. Curtis, "she's the man's own child. Surely he has a right to—"

A sound of a bell pealing through the house cut off her words. Then came heavy footsteps in the hall. Before anyone could figure on the cause of this commotion, the door burst open and several uniformed men came in. When Uriah Devon caught sight of them, he made a dash for the window, but two heavy officers were on him before he was half way across the room. It took but a few minutes for the officials to explain to Doctor Pendlehaven that they had been trailing Devon for a long time, that he was wanted for a crime in Syracuse.

When they were leading him out manacled and deeply enraged, he turned on Tonnie.

"I'll get even with you, miss," he snapped at her, his eyes full of hate, "and I'll get even with you too, mister." He threw the last half of his sentence at Doctor John, whose only reply was a shrug of his shoulders.

During the struggle between the detectives and Uriah, Mrs. Curtis had clutched at Pendlehaven's neck, but he had cast her off without ceremony. Now the three were alone, Tonnie, palpitating and fearful, Mrs. Curtis, sobbing on the floor, and Doctor John, looking at her sternly.

"Sarah," he said haughtily, "I saw the disgraceful way you were pulling this child's hair when I came in, and at last, much as I dislike doing it, I must ask you to leave my house."

"Leave?" Mrs. Curtis screamed. "Where would I go? I haven't a place in the world but this."

A careless gesture from Doctor John told Tonnie that that fact didn't interest him. She slipped her hand into his. Lifting eyes that were troubled and dark-circled, she begged:

"Let her stay, Cousin John, Mebbe she didn't know my daddy would have killed me if he'd got me back to the Dirty Mary."

Pendlehaven put his arm around her, and with a ring of fierceness in his voice, said:

"There, Sarah, there's pity for you. If you stay, it's because Tony Devon pleads for you, not because I have any sense of duty toward you. I hope you feel properly grateful."

The doctor strode to the door, opened it and motioned for her to be gone. Then weeping, she clattered away, her sobs audible even after the door was closed.

For a few moments Tony Devon wept silently in John Pendlehaven's arms.

"Oh, it's awful to have daddy taken away to jail," she moaned, "but he won't be good, he just won't!"

"You're much better off to have him away, little girl," soothed Pendlehaven.

CHAPTER XIII.

Good for Evil.

That night for dinner, five people sat about the Pendlehaven table. Reggie, pale and miserable looking, sat next to his mother, and Philip MacCauley was opposite Doctor John.

Katherine, silent and morose, was at her own place. She had heard her mother's version of the afternoon's happening in amazement and anger, and it only added to her discontent to hear Cousin John tell the tale to Philip.

"Sarah thinks," went on the doctor, "that we should have tamely given her up without a word to—to that brute!"

"I can't see how you can keep a man's child from him, Cousin John," excused Mrs. Curtis, a dull red mounting to each high cheekbone.

Pendlehaven laughed.

"She wouldn't have been much use to him in prison, my dear Sarah," was his answer.

"What're you talking about?" demanded Reggie, turning red-rimmed eyes on his mother.

"Your Cousin John insists on keeping the daughter of a man named Devon in the house here when her father wants her home," she replied.

Reggie's face grew a misty gray.

"Devon," he repeated mechanically. "I didn't know we had any such girl here."

"She's always with Cousin Paul," remarked Katherine, with a sidelong glance at Philip. "It does seem satisfying, though, to know who she is. Mother says she comes of common stock."

MacCauley's face grew dark, and Pendlehaven cast a glance of anger at his young cousin.

"Both Kathie and I," began Mrs. Curtis. "Why, Reggie, my darling, I never saw you look so sick in my life!"

"Aw, cut it!" growled the boy, unsteadily. "Tell me what became of the girl's father."

"He's going to jail for a nice long rest," interjected Pendlehaven. "It seems he was mixed up in a theft in Syracuse."

Reginald got up from the table.

"I don't want anything more to eat," he growled, as his mother started to remonstrate with him. "I'm going to bed."

When he got upstairs, he looked at himself in the glass. How white and thin he had grown! He looked as if he had died and was trying to come to life again. He was frightened almost out of his wits too. Then Tonnie Devon really was in the house. It hadn't been her ghost that had thrown him bodily from the window sill after all. Uriah, knowing that, had come and made a demand for his daughter and had been arrested. Perhaps he would be arrested also, and for a crime worse than stealing. Had the girl mentioned the fact of his trying to poison Paul Pendlehaven? If she hadn't, would she? When Mrs. Curtis came in to ask how he felt, he was crumpled in a big chair, shaking as if he had been attacked with ague.

"My goodness, Reggie, you look awful," she said, coming to his side. "Tell me, child, what's the matter?"

FORD

The Universal Car

THAT MIGHTY SERVICEABLE TRUCK

There is this about the Ford one-ton truck that keeps it growing in popularity, namely, the good reports which the owners of Ford trucks spread abroad among their friends and acquaintances.

There is no testimony of merit quite so strong as the testimony of personal experience. It is not long after a Ford one-ton truck is sold in a community until other sales of the same truck follow, because, "its work do follow it."

Well, "there is a reason." Yes there are many reasons. The Ford one-ton truck was built to serve and to satisfy. It carries all the Ford virtues: lightness in weight, simplicity in design, strength in construction, flexibility and durability—besides it has the lowest first cost and brings the lowest operating expenses in the truck market.

It is just as useful; just as necessary on the farm as it is in the city. It is just as necessary to the tradesmen, manufacturers, contractors, commission men and others in the city as it is necessary for such concerns to have a place to do business in—in other words, the Ford truck is a general utility, and because of this fact of its universal economy it is in a class by itself.

We will be glad to take your order for one, or more Ford trucks and will give you fairly prompt delivery. You will likewise have the assurance of that reliable and economical after-service which is such a valuable factor in the service of Ford cars. Price, truck chassis $545.00, f. o. b. Youngster Was Scared.

I had given my nephew a knife.
That same day, while out walking with his father and me, he persisted in opening and closing the knife. His father warned him repeatedly that he might cut himself. He was unusually quiet a little later and lagged behind.
I tug on my coat and he dropped back
a little, and he, in a hoarse little voice,
said, showing his teeth, "Uncle

Tree Grows Inside House.

A graceful elm tree shades a dwelling house near the Maine coast thoroughly, because it grows through its roof. It also grows through two floors. It was cut down as a very small tree when the house was to be built, but later was found to be pushing up the floor. Its persistent desire for growth was humored, and now it is a stately tree, with unusual surroundings.

Idiosyncrasies.

The thing to be remembered is that there are personal idiosyncrasies in every worker, and that each worker does some kind of work especially well and other tasks indifferently or poorly. It is hardly worth while for the mistress to attempt to change a worker's natural manner of work or habits! Some workers plod slowly for hours and they are not the kind that can ever work quickly for short periods. The thing to do is to try to find out how they do best and improve their efficiency along that particular line.

both men and women are now taking Tanlac and are testifying daily to the remarkable results they have derived from its use.Among this number is Mrs.
Margaret Waring of 522 Oakmont Avenue, Oakmont, Pa., who while discussing her experiences said:"If everybody knew how much good Tanlac has done me there isn't one who wouldn't think just as I do, that only it's worth its weight in gold. I have taken four bottles but besides getting relief from troubles
that came near wrecking my health entirely I have gained twenty pounds in weight.Before I took Tanlac I was in a fearful run down condition. My stomach was so upset that I couldn't eat anything but what would sour and bloat me up until I could scarcely breathe. There was such a tight feeling through my chest and such awful pains about my heart that I became alarmed thinking I had heart trouble."I often had weak, smothery spells and became so dizzy that everything seemed black before me.I was also troubled with rheumatism so bad that every bone in my body seemed to ache. On getting up in the mornings, especially, those rheumatic pains were so severe that I could scarcely get around."I always felt tired and so nervous that the least thing would upset me. I had such terrible headaches that at times I felt just like
I couldn't stand it another minute, and sleep was almost impossible."For three years I had suffered
this way and while I tried numbers of different kinds of medicines the results were always disappointing.
But I finally got Tanlac and almost from that time I began taking it my appetite returned and it was only a short time until all bloating, pain, smothering and my other stomach misery disappeared."Well, after taking four bottles I was feeling like a new person and all my friends were talking about how much better I looked. And although it has been sometime now since Tanlac built me up so wonderfully I am still feeling fine and never miss an opportunity to say a good word for this grand medicine.
My fourteen year old daughter, who was very weak and nervous, took Tanlac also and it has made her strong and healthy. My case was certainly a good one to test the value of Tanlac, and I just think it is the grandest medicine in the world."Tanlac is sold in Bedford by all

TWO YEARS' WORK FOR LAWMAKERSCONGRESSMEN ARE LIKELY TO BE KEPT IN WASHINGTON FOR THAT LENGTH OF TIME.

EXTRA SESSION IN MARCH

Some of the Legislation Planned for Present Session Probably Will Be Postponed—Tariff Revision Will Occupy Many Months.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington. — Congress probably will sit almost uninterruptedly for two years. This will be appalling to those to the American public according to the varying views of the individuals making up that public.When one speaks of continuous sessions of congress the word "continuous" is not to be taken literally. The present congress dies on March 4,
and therefore there will be a break until the new congress is called together. But the break is not likely to be a wide one. The chances are that the Sixty-seventh congress will be called in extraordinary session not later than the third week in March.
It will sit almost unquestionably until late in the fall. The second session of the Sixty-seventh congress, which is the first regular session, will begin next December and inasmuch as the session beginning that month generally is known as the long session because March 4 does not bring it to an end,
the chances are that it will run through until late in the fall of 1922.Why is it considered probable that congress will sit virtually uninterruptedly for such a length of time? The answer is easy. The program of legislation which has been laid down by the leaders of the party which is about to come into power takes pages to contain it. The Republican leaders say they intend to undo much that the Democrats have done and to do many things on their party's own account.
So it seems that the legislation, or attempted legislation, as war's aftermath is to take up as much time and
as much debate as the war legislation itself.

Some Things May Be Postponed.

At this short session of congress it was proposed in addition to the passage of the appropriation bills to take up partial tariff revision, the plans for disarmament, measures to limit immigration, legislation affecting the soldiers of the late war and several other bills, but it seems probable today that some of the things upon which immediate action is asked will be postponed for consideration until the next President calls congress together in extraordinary session in March.The Republicans will have commanding majorities in both house and senate after March 4, and the White House will be occupied by a Republican president. With all governmental powers in its hands, however, the Republican party will not be able to enact all the legislation that it desires without a fight. It can win in any fight probably which it undertakes unless it shall split into factions, one of which it is conceivable might join the Democrats in an attempt to defeat certain bills.Of course even to intimate that there will be factions in the Republican party is to take something for granted, because it is known that one of the chief desires and efforts of the President-elect is to keep the ranks harmonious. Factions, however, have come into being in the past, and human nature remains about the same year in and year out, and so it may be that factions will spring into being again, although the Republican leaders will make every attempt to keep all the members of the party in line.At the present session of congress the so-called farmers' tariff bill has been given consideration. The house passed it easily, but it is having trouble in the senate. It may be, however, that it will become a law prior to March unless President Wilson shall intervene with his veto.

Tariff Will Consume Much Time.

The comprehensive tariff legislation which the majority in congress intends to undertake will occupy the attention of the members for many months of the extraordinary session. It takes a long while to put comprehensive tariff legislation on the statute books. The hearings in both house and senate are long drawn out. They last sometimes for months and after they are ended and the bill is formulated, there always come long, drawn-out debates.In the house of representatives, of course, by the adoption of a rule limiting debate, a tariff measure can be put through in comparatively short time, but the "rock of deliberation" is to be met with in the senate where unless the new rule allowing cloture is invoked the debate will run on almost certainly for some months.Notwithstanding the fact that the senate now has a rule which, if put into operation, will limit debate, the regulation is so worded that it is difficult to put it into effect, and moreover the senators do not like to invoke
the rule.

Ambassadors Must Be Wealthy.

In the intervals between the periods of sharp interest in prospective cabinet appointments, Washington shows almost equally sharp interest in the question of who'sto be who in the higher ranks of the diplomatic corps after March 4 next.
President-elect Harding will appoint
new ambassadors to Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, and to several other countries of not quite so high a rank, as rank goes among the nations of the world.Under the scale of salaries paid to ambassadors and ministers representing this country in foreign lands, no one but a rich man can be considered for appointment to any one of the places. The ambassador to Great Britain spends, it is said, and necessarily spends, $100,000 a year over and above
the salary of $17,000 which Uncle Sam pays him. Ambassadors and ministers to other countries "spend in proportion."It is remarked on as curious today that a man, Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, who has been mentioned as a possible ambassadorial appointee, was the man who, when a representative in congress some years ago, tried his best to get a bill through, providing funds for the building of residences
for our ambassadors and ministers abroad. The bill failed of passage, although it was admitted then, as it is admitted today, that if Uncle Sam wants to send men abroad who have every qualification for ambassadorial office except that of wealth, it ought to be possible for him to do so.It is said that the house in which one of our ambassadors lived in London cost $30,000 a year for its mere rental. It takes a lot of door men, maids and general factotums to run a house like this, and the wages of the whole staff must be paid, like the rent, out of the pocket of the head of the house. The ambassador who balances up at the end of the year and finds that he hasn't spent more than $150,- 000, is accounted to be in great luck.It takes a new ambassador and a new minister a long time to know how to run things. While he is learning, his real work is done by some attache who has been with the embassy for years and who could fill the ambassadorial job without the least trouble
except for the fact that his salary probably does not exceed $3,500 a year.Some of the great nations of the world train all the members of their diplomatic corps with a view to promoting them when the time shall come.
This means that when a Frenchman or an Englishman, or a man of some other nation is appointed as ambassador or minister, he knows his business.
Liberal allowances are made by most countries for the expenses of their embassies and legations.

Mr. Wilson Refuses Big Offer.

President Wilson has declined an offer of $150,000 for the first newspaper article, long or short, which he should write after leaving the White House. The President said in his letter of declination that no article written by anybody could be worth the huge sum named.Successful authors who get 10 cents a word, or perhaps more, for magazine articles, probably were somewhat staggered when they read of the offer made to Mr. Wilson. Virtually he was told that whether his article was long or short the $150,000 would be forthcoming. If the President had agreed to the terms offered and had written what ordinarily is considered a "far"
newspaper article, one 1,500 words long, his pay would have been at the rate of $100 a word, fairly good compensation, and especially so if Mr. Wilson in writing made up his mind to confine himself to words of one syllable. In this case the article would represent maximum pay with a minimum of handwriting or typewriting effort.It is pretty well known that the President intends to write after he leaves the White House. Already, as the world knows, he has written widely. Nearly all our ex-presidents have been writers to a more or less prolific extent, and also to a more or less excellent degree.Mr. Wilson already has written "Congressional Government," "The State," "Division and Reunion," "An Old Master and Other Political Essays," "Mere Literature and Other Essays," "George Washington," "The History of the American People,"
"Constitutional Government in the United States," "The State Elements
of Historical and Practical Politics,"
"Free Life," "The New Freedom,"
"When a Man Comes to Himself," "On Being Human," and a good many other things. It can be seen that already
Mr. Wilson has been an industrious writer, and the belief is that if his health shall admit he intends to keep up the pace.

Tumulty May Collaborate.

It is understood that Secretary-to-the-President Joseph P. Tumulty, will write a book when he has left the White House. If Mr. Wilson shall write a book on his administration,
Mr. Tumulty necessarily will, in a way, collaborate with his chief, for the secretary is familiar with what may be called the details of the administration's work, and probably has all the records where he can lay his hand
on them, and probably also stores up many unwritten records in his mind.The World war period was so full of administrative action, and also, as perhaps some critics will say, inaction, and so full of controversy that the field is one which can be tilled with tremendous interest to the tiller and to the persons who visually benefit by the tilling when the fruits of it are on the printed page.

His Comeback.

Wife (during quarrel)—If it weren't for me you'd be the most foolish person on earth.Hub—Very well! Go ahead and hog the first place if you want to.

sold—so come early and often and buy for your present and future needs. Remember these prices profit and in many instances we are pricing goods

to you at less than they cost us.

These prices will speak for themselves especially when you consider that the wholesale markets are higher—cotton goods advancing nearly every day.

or more (groceries excepted) when cash is sent with order.
